TYCHO BRAHE (1546-1601)

Born of noble Danish family; Univ. of Copenhagen. Traveled to Univ. of Ingolstadt, Univ. of Wittenberg and Univ. of Basel, to study with eminent Astronomy professor. Returned to Denmark; descended (Nov. 1572), a bright new star shining in constellation of Cassiopeia. In 1576, King of Denmark became his patron; set aside the island of HVEN for his observations. He erected an elaborate astronomical observatory.

There he made the most complete and accurate astronomical observations that had ever been carried out up to that time. He spent a lot of money & was forced to leave the Island in 1597. He died in 1601. In 1602 his masterpiece "The Preliminary for the Restoration of Astronomy" was published. The positions of 777 stars were given with hitherto unapproached accuracy. He bequeathed his priceless collections to Johannes Kepler (his ass't).

Aug 24, 1572

On the morning of St. Bartholomew's day the quays of Paris were running with blood of the Huguenots who had been massacred before dawn. Other towns followed suit. Computations of the slaughter ranging from 10 to 50,000 or even more. Among the victims was Caligny; Henry of Navarre and his young cousin of Condé escaped the murder.
